PERTINENT INFORMATION

Excerpt autostated verbatim.

3. In reply to questions, Monique stated that MENSINK was convinced that his ruin was contributed by BOURGES family, because they did not help him (especially Monique who was employed in the Lebanese Legation to the Holy See) to emigrate to Syria where many compatriots Germans have gone. Monique BOURGES added that she had the impression that MENSINK was a narcotic addict and that the drug were furnished by the priest, Jean-BAPTOT D'OLIVET DE PREAUMENIL, former element of trust of Cardinal TISSERAND who about three months ago left for Paris, where presently he is a professor in a University.

6. Monique maintained cordial contacts with two priests, members of the clergy TISSERAND. With the greatest of interest to the Cardinal [redacted] In 1948 TISSERAND charged the priest Jean BAPTOT D'OLIVET DE PREAUMENIL to go to see them from time to time. Actually, however, [redacted] that Monique was employed by the Lebanese Legation to the Holy See, BAPTOT D'OLIVET DE PREAUMENIL asked her detailed questions on the office matters and on the attitude of the Minister manifested towards the ecclesiastical authorities and on French policy in the Middle and Near East in general. Monique always evaded these questions, fearing to lose the sympathy of her Lebanese protector who appeared to be very generous towards her.

12. Regarding Monique's activity, MENSINK left a declaration which was found among papers after his death in which, among other things, he illustrated Monique 's double activity, who allegedly, in contrast to her later and vague admissions, carried out a double agent role in favor of Cardinal TISSERAND who has always been suspected of serving two authorities, the Vatican and the French, but the latter perhaps more fervidly.
